In isolated spots totally lacking infood, the live stock as well as the people-has suffered tremendous mortality. Thousands of draft animals have fallen dead in the road while hauling precious food over the snows to the villages. Others have been slaughtered for food, but by far the greater proportion has gone through the winter, and now, with green pasture only a month or so off, are in fair shape for work.

M. Ryazonoff, commissar for agriculture of Samara province, says there are still more than 200,000 head of workable live stock left, or 50 per cent of those available in far from the fields.

Ragweed and other vegetation ordinarily considered of no food value have been used for forage. The animals have been able to do only about half the work that a well fed beast would do. Most of them, particularly the camels, present, particularly the camels, present ticularly the camels, present a woe-

Peasants who have seen members of their own families and neighbors die of hunger have saved their camels, horses and oxen. Except in villages where starvation knew no bounds, they have not killed their beasts, even when they knew that a few pounds of horse flesh might mean a week's life to themselves.
Horses were more precious than humans. Without live stock no food could be brought from the railways and the seed for next year's cropwould lie useless in the box cars far from the fields.

These dromedaries groan continuously as they lumber along the snow roads at a rate of three or four miles an hour, protesting over every bump or snowdrift in the road.

Nevertheless, they drag loads of more than a ton fifteen to twenty miles a day. The horses pull at least half of this load.

Even with the scarcity and dearness of forage, the peasants whom the correspondent encountered were not selling their live stock cheaply. Before the revolution, a good big work camel in Samara province could be bought for 40 to 50 rubles. This represented $20 to $25.

The 30,000,000 to 50,000,000 rubles now asked for camels in this district represents only about half that amount when figured in gold, but compared with prices asked for other commodities, live stock is still held at a high figure.
